MONEY IN MOTION

Chart 7 of 10:

The same chart again, with two horizontal blue lines drawn highlighting the fact that the SPX is back down to a level of support at its September high, yes, but support, as all will know, is not a plywood board or a concrete floor, but rather is a mattress top. And once at a level of support, a stock, currency, index or commodity often sinks into support, before finding support.

Chart 8 of 10:

The same chart again, with three horizontal blue lines drawn highlighting the fact that support comes into play where we are now... and is in play all the way down to the 4275+/- level.

MONEY IN MOTION

Chart 9 of 10:

A selloff to the midpoint of the 'support range' would represent a 7.3% decline from last week's 52-week high (and all-time high). See middle horizontal blue line...

Chart 10 of 10:

A selloff to the low of the 'support range' would represent a 10.3% decline from last week's 52-week high (and all-time high). See bottom horizontal blue line...

And one and all will know where the author of these pages thinks the market is headed.
